Mr. John B. Whitelaw, Chief of Teacher Education in the Office of Education in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare was interviewed by a group of reporters, and said, in part:

WHITELAW: "...Our whole culture must raise itself intellectually by its bootstraps if we're going to meet this problem of the Soviet economic challenge effectively. Now I'm very happy to say that I'm in good company in this. There are three people that I find in closest agreement with my attitude on this. Now, first of all, Mr. Allen Dulles of the Central Intelligence Agency, who has been talking to Congress about this for about three years now. Second is, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, whose book "Friends and Enemies" is an excellent discussion of the Russian situation, and third is the most brilliant woman that I know of in the world today, Miss Barbara Ward or Lady Jackson. Those three people seem to see it exactly as I do, as far as I can distinguish, and I think that's pretty good company."
